

Erdman Anthony Acquires Dwyer Engineering

October 11, 2021

Erdman Anthony, a multidisciplinary engineering firm with offices across the eastern U.S., has acquired Dwyer Engineering.

Founded in 1981, Dwyer Engineering is a mechanical, electrical, plumbing, and refrigeration engineering firm that serves the food store, restaurant, retail, and office building markets from offices in Leesburg, Virginia, and Columbia, Maryland. The firm's services and personnel will be aligned under Erdman Anthony's facilities engineering division.

As part of the acquisition, all Dwyer employees will become employees of Erdman Anthony. To maintain a seamless transition for clients, Dwyer personnel will continue in their existing roles and with their existing account assignments.

"I am thrilled to welcome the people of Dwyer Engineering to our Erdman Anthony community," said Curt Helman, PE, president and CEO of Erdman Anthony. "Dwyer is a fantastic company with talented people, and joining forces will allow both firms to better serve our clients with greater depth of resources than ever before."

"Joining our teams means expanded capacity for serving our clients and the continuation of our 40-year commitment to provide growing companies with cost-effective solutions," said Matt Dwyer, PE, founder and CEO of Dwyer Engineering. "We're excited to be doing that with Erdman Anthony."

Matt Dwyer will join Erdman Anthony as a vice president and will continue to be engaged with clients.

Dwyer Engineering provides services from locations in Virginia and Maryland, where Erdman Anthony expects to increase staff size and service offerings.
