May 11, 2022

With offices in Austin, Dallas, Houston, and San Antonio, Method Architecture (Method) has acquired GSC Architects (GSC) to strengthen their Austin and San Antonio presence. A natural fit, both firms are committed to delivering quality architectural services with a focus on sustainability and ego-free, client-centric design solutions. Together, the firm now features more than 70 employees, including 12 registered architects and 6 registered interior designers, located in four offices across Texas.

Jake Donaldson, Managing Partner at Method Architecture, notes that, “Combining forces with GSC Architects provides an opportunity to continue their legacy of great architecture and sustainable design across both the public and commercial sectors. GSC’s experience both complements and strengthens Method’s portfolio of work and helps us expand our existing presence in Central Texas.”

Method Architecture, a certified Minority-Owned Business, is licensed in 27 states and is a full-service architectural firm specializing in a variety of project types ranging from experiential retail, breweries, and mixed-use developments, to industrial warehouse, distribution, and high-tech manufacturing facilities. Method recently completed M-K-T Heights, with Michael Hsu Office of Architecture, a unique adaptive reuse project transforming five former industrial buildings into a lively development located in the bustling Heights. The project features over 200,000 square feet of office, restaurant, retail, and fitness space connecting to the Heights Hike and Bike Trail.
