Since then, Galloway has added nine additional offices in Colorado, Utah, California, & Georgia. This is Galloway's fourth acquisition in the past 4 years.

Georgia Galloway's regional growth has also been accompanied by the addition of new services. Originally recognized for its civil engineering and fuel system design programs, Galloway has expanded to become a truly multidisciplinary firm. The firm now offers 13 in-house disciplines, including comprehensive architectural design and civil engineering services as well as survey, landscape architecture, and transportation engineering.

"This acquisition evolved from our desire to create opportunity for Galloway's staff and clients. It was a strategic decision as part of Galloway's overall growth plan to add capabilities and expand our regional influence in the southeast," said Galloway Director of Architecture Kristoffer Kenton.

Studio for Housing Design has continually focused on finding the right opportunities for its team while also building meaningful relationships within the community.
