December 7, 2023

HMB Professional Engineers, a Kentucky-based engineering firm, is thrilled to announce the add-on acquisition of Corn Island Archaeology, LLC (CIA). The acquisition gives HMB cultural historic and archaeological services, making HMB's environmental division a full-service enterprise that can bring turnkey environmental solutions to its clients.

"We are delighted to have Corn Island join the HMB team," said HMB President Rob Dowler. "The addition of Anne Bader and her outstanding group of cultural historic and archaeological professionals will enable HMB to provide a full suite of environmental services to better serve our clients."

Corn Island Archaeology is Kentucky-based premier provider of archaeological and cultural historic services. CIA partners with their clients, attending to their needs to develop the appropriate strategies and solutions for each unique project. CIA provides a full range of surveys, research and documentation to satisfy all the Cultural Resources Management (CRM) requirements for their clientele.

"I am so very pleased to join the HMB/Trilon organization," said Anne Bader, Principal of Corn Island Archaeology. "I have worked with HMB for years, and in the last year I have gotten to know their leadership on a more personal level. I am completely satisfied and comfortable in the knowledge that my employees will find themselves in a work environment that is so similar to our own. Further, I am convinced that my practice will continue seamlessly and that the interests of my valued and longstanding clients will be met with the same level of care as before. Looking forward to exploring expanded opportunities to better serve our state and local governments, private developers, and communities."
