

Growing Bham engineering firm acquires local land surveying business

February 5, 2024

A Birmingham-based civil and transportation engineering firm has acquired a local land surveying company.

Dynamic Civil Solutions acquired Jackins Butler and Adams in a move that helps the company broaden the scope of surveying services offered.

Financial details were not disclosed.

Bolaji Kukoyi, president of DCS, said the acquisition is a move to merge the companies to meet the growing demands of clients and bring a more comprehensive and streamlined approach.

"At DCS, we are committed to delivering top-notch engineering solutions, and the merger with JBA significantly reinforces our ability to provide comprehensive surveying services," Kukoyi said. "This strategic move aligns with our commitment to innovation and positions us as a leader in delivering integrated solutions for our clients."

Rowland Jackins, principal of JBA, will join DCS as director of surveying, and the full JBA team will be retained. JBA will relocate into the current DCS office at 2210 Second Ave. N.

"As we welcome Rowland and the JBA team into the DCS family, we are excited about the opportunities this union presents for our clients and the community. Together, we will continue to uphold the high standards of excellence that both DCS and JBA are known for," Kukoyi said.

Link to original press release:

<https://www.bizjournals.com/birmingham/news/2024/02/05/dynamic-civil-solutions-jackins-butler-and-adams.html>

