

Stantec to acquire Page, a US-based full-service design, architecture, and engineering firm

April 3, 2025

Stantec, a global leader in sustainable design and engineering, has signed a definitive purchase agreement to acquire Page, a 1,400-person architecture and engineering firm headquartered in Washington, DC.

Page is a leading, nationally recognized US-based architecture and engineering firm. The acquisition will deepen Stantec's expertise and resources in key growth areas such as advanced manufacturing, data centers, and healthcare, while adding new capabilities in cleanroom design and fabrication facilities. It also strengthens Stantec's US offering in mission critical, academic, civic, cultural, aviation, science and technology, and commercial.

"Page is a respected architecture and engineering firm with shared values and a commitment to design excellence and innovation," said Gord Johnston, president and chief executive officer of Stantec. "This acquisition will greatly support our strategic market growth in our Buildings business while enabling us to leverage our expanded platform to better serve our North American clients and grow our worldwide market presence."

With the addition of Page, Stantec's US Buildings practice will grow by approximately 35 percent and the Company's overall US employee headcount will expand to approximately 13,500 people.
