May 12, 2025

IMEG is pleased to announce that Lynch Mykins, a nationally recognized structural engineering and special inspections firm, has joined the company. The addition strengthens IMEG's technical capabilities and expands its presence across North Carolina and the broader Southeast region.

Founded in 1974, Lynch Mykins is located in Raleigh, NC, with additional offices in Charlotte and Greensboro, NC, and Norfolk, VA. Known for its award-winning work, the firm offers a full spectrum of structural services including forensic engineering, peer reviews, sustainable design, and special inspections. Lynch Mykins serves clients across a wide range of markets including commercial, corporate, healthcare, education, historic preservation, federal, housing, religious, and sports and recreation.

"We are thrilled to welcome the Lynch Mykins team to IMEG," said Paul VanDuyne, IMEG President and CEO. "Their structural expertise and reputation for quality work align perfectly with our values and strategic vision. This addition enhances our technical depth and supports continued growth in North Carolina and the Southeast—a region rich with opportunity and talent."

Scott Francis will serve as Client Executive at IMEG, leading regional operations and collaborating closely with existing leaders and team members from both Lynch Mykins and IMEG. Clients can expect the same people, the same high-quality service, and the same commitment—now backed by even greater resources.

"This is an exciting new chapter for Lynch Mykins, and most importantly, for our clients and employees," said Anna Lynch, CEO of Lynch Mykins. "IMEG brings the resources and experience of a national firm, but like us, they believe in market-level expertise and strong client relationships. That means our clients will now have access to a broader range of engineering services, deeper technical resources, and a team that can take on even more complex and high-profile projects—without losing the personalized attention they value."
